atching the Wheel of Fortune Go Round-Experience That Recalled the Inquistion Tortures-A Race to Get Even With the Came-A Climpse After Four Years.

The title of "King of Wall Street" was erred upon me in the sumptuous outer nee of a broker in the street at the close of a last Presidential campaign. There was a could say good-by to a booming market, with stock quotations which followed carried prices up to a point that, after six months of tribulaightmares of utter ruin, made me even with be Wall street game. When a certain stock— twas U. P. at a height that seems dizzy, when look at to-day's share list—touched certain eighth. my elaborate enicu-tions demonstrated that I would be ust where I started in the previous May, no. How I had longed for that moment no could tell. I had figured enough to calcuforty colleges, and at times the figures ed such a terrible balance against me that tomer to live financially who got his account in such a shape. I was short of one stock that such a shape. I was short of one stock that twas sailing up like a balloon, and I was long of another that was dropping like isad, and between the two I folt like one of the old victims of the Inquisition must have felt when they ware struching him on the rack. The genius that turned the wheel of fortune seemed to be doing double duty, and I was caught between the wheels, with my feet bound to one and say hands to the other. Every time
the wheels, with my feet bound to one and
say hands to the other. Every time
the wheels, with my feet bound to one and
say hands to the other. Every time
the wheels, with my feet bound to one and

the wheels, with my feet bound to one and
say hands to the other. Every time
the wheels, with my feet bound to one and
say hands to the other. Every time the wheels, with my feet bound to the spleasures of existence, the put-and-call sellers who, as I now reflect upon a short but eventful ilfe, stand cheek by jowl with the hotel clerks as the only true American aristocrats, would during in the most delicate tidbits of goesip, indicating that Jay Gould was going to put my short stock up higher than it had ever been thefore, and that my long stock was going to the bow-wows, where it would only have a speculative value. This meant that the stock that I thought was selling too high at 90 Jay Gould thought cheep at 105; and the coal shares, that seemed to me below their intrinsic value at 47, were doomed to sink to 10 or thereabouts, to lead a sickly toastnot existence.

It seemed clear, then, that Jay Gould must be a fool, but I could not remember ever having heard any one so describe him. It suddenly confidentially toid an acquaintance how I was working the market he unhesitatingly agreed with me. When I heard him rovening my financial secrets, I agreed with him afresh, and when kind friends gathered around me on a gloomy afternoon and advised me earnestly to egon the whilewashed walls of the building across the area.

Limp and sickly as I was, I felt enough self-confidence to rasist acting upon the advice, and had afterward noted how, when he got out and settled his losses, his stocks bettered and scon reached a point where he could have saved himself. Then I had heard the kind friends who had induced him to sponge off the slate, to try again some other day, eacks over his fool-fabress in running away at the first sign of trouble. Had it not been for this experience I verily believe that I would have been mortgased to day to the wall street broker. The kind friends meant no harm. In the excitement of speculation, advice in grave mobey matters is the cheacest thing in Wall street. If adds interest to the game and coets nothing. Be I held on like grim death to a deceased cologed person. I was on duty by the ticker five hours a day, watching for the combination of figures that was to land me high and dry. Sometimes they accomed to be coming, and then they would melt like frostwork in the sunshine. The long stock would convalsee, and then relapse, while the short stock seemed to be the healthlest thing on the list. By and by the skies cleared, and I seemed to be on the homestretch. In the crucible of Wall street appeulation I had lost all appetite for gains, and my rulling passion was to get even. The long stock braced up, the short stock wakened, and if these happy conditions pould be charmed into continuance I would be victor. The odds were against me. Nothing isst in Wall street like misfortune. It was a race for me with peace of mind, contantment, philosophy, and experience as the stakes, but it was difficult riding a long and a short stock at the same time on a booming market. A happy thought struck me, It was to change my steeds and mount afresh. Overboard went the short stock at 108. I mounted Erie and U. P., and on Nov. 14, 1880. I dashed under the wire. I was exactly even. Instantly I closed my account and with a certified check for my margin and my statement the area.

An asthmatic lawyer, whose face had shrunk with his losses until it seemed to be dried parchment stretched over bones, asked if the speaker meant to say that he was even, and whose he learned that that was the idea which the speaker sought as delicately as possible to appress, he sighed and wished to heaven that he was even; but he added furiously that he intended to remain on guard until he was even. The ex-Methodist minister who had seen $10,900 grow to $50,000, and that amount shrivel to $3,000, turned to see the closing quotations, and said that he didn't believe a man sould miss it on the surrent market.

Sations, and said that he didn't believe a man bould miss it on the current market.

The old-time speculator, whose feats of twenty years ago filled the newspapers, although he was now apparently no better squipped than a novice at the game, said that too man ever got rid of the fascination of Wall street speculation, and that for one he believed use man ever would.

ne man ever would.
"The hour has come." I said, "and here is "The hour has come." I said, "and here is the man."

With a gleam of humor in his eye, he took my statement of account and folded it into a grown. Then he pinned the certified check apos it, so that it danced like a white plume, and, placing the paper coroset on my brow, he said: I crown thee King of Wall street."

Just then the broker came out with his hand fall of flips containing memoranda of sales and purchases. What's the fun?" he saked.

"Here is a man who is even," said the old-time speculator, "and we have crowned him ling of Wall street."

Now a good time for him to make some money, said the broker, passing on.

"Boa't hurt his feelings by telling him that am going away," I said. I had found that I had paid him in commissions enough for all of his summer expenses in the country.

am going away." I said. I had found that I had paid him in commissions enough for all of his summer expenses in the country.

Four years have passed and solvency reigns any basiness. The other day I went down to sook at my husting ground in the last Free-liential campaign, where I wore a sertified aboet as the white plume of viotory. I could carresty believe my oyes. There were several of my old acquaintances about the tape, but my old acquaintances can the tape were stranger in their hearted and wern appearance. Everything and everybody—all except the chirpy broker—accessed to have been become brown to war. My old short stock showed a present of over $5,000 on the figures at which I had sold it, but the old long stock was till a clei member of the family and that railroad charless—the pecciver—whose advent gave me such a wrench four years before had been called magnin. Stocks which will always seem sear to me, because they made me even with the game, were down, one forty points and the other heart 100 points. They loid me that there had been a strinkage on the entire list of over 11.600,000.00. There was a new crop of speculators evidently after Jay Gould's scale. They have a suphtered them. but I had not been introduced. My old sequaintances barely remembered me. Most of them could not call my pame, although they had crowned me. King of Wall street." I recalled the incident. Then one by one consider to me that it would have been money in socket if they had gone with me. That was a boautiful market, that market of 1880. They nover expected to see its like again. They got hearly even—one of them was quite even—but they had one which had not been money in socket if they had gone with me. That was a boautiful market, that market of 1880. They nover expected to see its like again. They got hearly even—one of them was quite even—but they held on, expecting stocks to go higher, and he ex-first of heart was teared. The old one had tried to buil a boar market. He evidently had no expectations beyond making the tried t

The office was not so luxurious as it was. The broker himself was astling close to the wind.
He recognized his old customer, and evidently expected a new account. It's the time now to lay in your stock." he said in a cheerful, moneymaking tone.

Just then the deep-toned yell of the newsloys was saited up from the street as they hurried down with an extra. The speculators surmised that there was another failure. As the broker passed out some one asked him if there was any new failure. He mentioned the house that had gone under, and getting no new orders, went on. Stocks grew weaker and the speculators grew ead. The King of Wall street

GEORGIA'S QUEER WOMEN.

Romarkable Power Exhibited by Luis Hurel, Mattle Price, and Mrs. Coleman.

Trees the Atlanta Constitution.

Georgia is winning a great reputation abroad as being the home of electric women. The manifestations of Miss Luia Hurst are now puzzling Korthern audiences. Then Miss Mattle Lee Price, living not more than ten miles from the home of Miss Hurst, developed the same inysterious power, and has sinc gone abroad to lilustrate the new type of Georgia womanhood. New a third and more remarkable case has developed in Atlanta, the lady being Mrs. C. F. Coleman, the wife of the Superintendent of the Atlanta cotton factory, and a lady of great worth. Mrs. Coleman had seen the wonderful Luia when she was in this city, and her husband had felt her peculiar and inceplicable power. About ten days ago Mrs. Coleman accidentally ascertained that a chair would yield to her touch and twist in any direction at her will without the use of muscular power. She imparted the knowledge to ber husband, and reponted trials were made. These trials only strongthened Mrs. Colemae's power and convinced her husband har a chair spower and convinced her husband has hight quite a number of invited guests assembled the Young Men's Christian Asseciation rooms to witness her first public manifestation of the strange power.

Mrs. Coleman was at first somewhat embarrassed, but as she proceeded with her task she became caim, and succeeded in everything she undertook. A stick held by Mr. Sectt and Mr. Kimbali was made to pass around freely, despite atrenuous efforts to hold it still. One of the gentleman was compelled very much against his will, to give up a pleasant chair in which he was sitting, the chair turning over and throwing him out, while a table was raised almost entirely from the floor simply by Mrs. Coleman holding her hands upon it. The masterplees was performed when Mrs. Coleman took a walking cause in her hand. She held one ond, and by simply touching the other end to the edge of the table made the table stand on two legs only. During the entire enerticians the econge of the table made the table stand on two From the Atlanta Constitution.

Brankes in Georgia.

From the Miliedpenilic Chronicle.

Mr. Tuttle, who has killed seventoen rattlemakes on his farm in this county since Christenss, vouches for this: That he and an old negro cleaned up a fence row whore many snakes raise every year. While at work they heard a noise in an old stimp close by, and knew that there was a nest of ratilesnakes inside.
Fresently they noticed a huge king make supproaching the stump. No they were quiet and awnited his motion, old man Ingram remarking: "Boss, der's gwine to be lively itine in dat stump drectly." Sing enough, the king snake went in, but alone bounded out and struck a bee line for a little hill hard by. In a few unjoutes he returned, and had two other king snakes with him.
Then all three descended into the hollow stump, and there followed a most tremendous noise. After some fitteen minutes the three kings came out and went off, and Mr. Tuttle, with old Jugram, dug up the stump.
They found five dead rattlesnakes.
